EDINBURGH ART FESTIVAL

4 August – 4 September 2011

Map

Welcome

Edinburgh Art Festival is now in its eighth year of sharing the very best of Scottish, UK and international visual art. With venues spread the length and breadth of Edinburgh, it is impossible to experience the Art Festival without taking in the spectacle of the city itself. We are delighted, therefore, to bring you this specially commissioned map by artist J. Maizlish, the result of several days spent exploring the city's galleries, festival sites and landmarks on foot. We hope you find it a practical and pleasurable companion to your festival visit.

At the heart of the city and this year's programme, is our festival pavilion in St. Andrew Square Gardens, made possible through the Scottish Government's Edinburgh Festivals Expo Fund. An exquisite 14 metre glass curve, Karen Forbes' Solar Pavilion is inspired by the city's important place in the history of optics and optical devices, and offers a highly appropriate focal point for the summer festival dedicated to bringing you the very best of visual art from Scotland and the world. Throughout the festival the pavilion will be the central hub for information about the festival programme, and host an exciting programme of events, performances and workshops.

For the last three years Edinburgh Art Festival has been supporting the commissioning of new work for public spaces in the city, and this year is no exception. The 2011 festival programme sees the launch of a major new public artwork by the acclaimed Scottish artist, Martin Creed. Commissioned by The Fruitmarket Gallery, Creed's Work No. 1059 is a permanent and joyful addition to the fabric of the city. Each one of the 104 (Scotsman) steps connecting Edinburgh's Old and New Towns have been clad in a different coloured marble from around the world, in a symbolic mapping of Edinburgh's international significance, both historic and contemporary.

Our own festival map is accompanied by a guide giving detailed information on all of the exhibitions in our programme. This is freely available at the Edinburgh Art Festival pavilion, and in all of our participating venues, and can also be downloaded from our website. The majority of exhibitions in the festival are free but the map and the guide give full details of ticket prices, where these apply.
